16 No. C 05-80253 misc JSW (EDL)

17 ORDER DENYING THIRD PARTY'S MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER

18 I. INTRODUCTION

19 Robb Evans & Associates LLC was appointed as Receiver over the assets of Andris Pukke
20 and DebtWorks, Inc., after Pukke and DebtWorks, Inc. settled with the FTC in a Maryland District 21 Court case. Peter Baker, a third party, manages assets owned in part by Pukke. The Receiver 22 subpoenaed documents and e-mail from Baker in the course of the Receiver's investigation to locate 23 assets belonging to Pukke. After Baker inadvertently produced documents that he contends were 24 privileged, Baker filed this motion for protective order. For the reasons stated below, the Court 25 DENIES the motion for protective order.

26 II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

27 In January 2006, the FTC settled a deceptive credit counseling and debt case against Andris 28 Pukke, founder of AmeriDebt, Inc., and against a related company owned by Pukke, DebtWorks,

1 Inc. The settlement agreement required Pukke to give up virtually all of his assets for a consumer 2 redress program for victims of the deception

3 In April 2005, Robb Evans & Associates LLC was appointed as Receiver by the Maryland 4 District Court with jurisdiction over the case, and was given authority to identify and maintain the 5 assets of Andris Pukke and DebtWorks, Inc. The order of appointment also authorized the Receiver
6 to continue his efforts to locate additional assets to fund a settlement for the victims. These assets, 7 termed “Receivership Property” are generally defined as “any Assets, wherever located, that are (1) 8 owned, controlled or held by or for the benefit of Pukke or DebtWorks, in whole or in part; (2) in the 9 actual or constructive possession of Pukke or DebtWorks; (3) held by an agent of Pukke or 10 DebtWorks . . . ; or (4) owned, controlled or held by, or in the actual or constructive possession of, or 11 otherwise held for the benefit of, any corporation, partnership, trust, or other entity directly or 12 indirectly owned or controlled by either Pukke or DebtWorks” Preliminary Injunction Order, 13 Federal Trade Commission v. AmeriDebt, Inc., et al., No. PJM 03-3317 (D. Md. filed April 20, 14 2005) (Doc. No. 122), at 4.

15 In the course of its investigation to locate such assets, the Receiver discovered that Pukke 16 owns an indirect 60% ownership in a Belize Corporation named Dolphin Development Company, 17 Ltd., which in turn is the owner and developer of Sanctuary Bay Estates, a real estate development 18 company in Belize. See Nov. 9, 2005 Hawes Decl. (Doc. No. 10), Ex. 1 (Kane Decl. in Opp’n to 19 Mot. for Instructions and for Interpretation and Enforcement of Preliminary Injunction Order, 20 Federal Trade Commission v. AmeriDebt, Inc., et al., No. PJM 03-3317 (D. Md. filed Aug. 15, 21 2005) (Doc. no. 262)) (“Aug. 15, 2005 Kane Decl.”) at ¶¶ 4-5. According to the Receiver, 22 “[r]eceivership records demonstrate that substantial funds of receivership entities have been ‘loaned’
23 by Pukke-controlled entities to Dolphin Development” and that “Dolphin Development is actively 24 selling properties and generating income that is also subject to the receivership under the 25 Preliminary Injunction Order.” Opp’n to Mot. to Quash (Doc. No. 16), at 4-5. Sanctuary Bay 26 Estates named “Peter Baker” as the contact person on its website, and his e-mail address as 27 Peterbelize@gmail.com. Aug. 15, 2005 Kane Decl. Ex. 1. The Receiver also learned that Baker 28 was a 15% shareholder in Dolphin Development. Id., Exs. 2-3. Accordingly, the Receiver served a

1 subpoena on Baker's e-mail provider to discover more information about Pukke's assets, including 2 Dolphin Development and Sanctuary Bay Estates.

3 Baker filed a motion to quash the subpoena, arguing that the subpoena sought irrelevant, 4 private, confidential and privileged information of an individual not a party to the action, including 5 attorney-client communications. The Court disagreed that the information was irrelevant, and 6 denied the motion to quash. On February 1, 2006, the Court ordered Baker to give his e-mail
7 provider permission to produce documents responsive to a subpoena. See February 1, 2006 Order 8 (Doc. No. 27). In order to shield any documents protected by the attorney-client privilege, the 9 Court ordered the provider to produce the documents to Baker's counsel, who would review the 10 correspondence before producing it to the Receiver. Although the Court concluded that Baker had 11 not shown that the e-mail account at issue was likely to contain personal information, the Court 12 nonetheless crafted an exception designed to protect any truly private material:

13
14 Baker's counsel shall review the documents provided by Google and withhold only 15 those documents that are shielded from discovery by the attorney-client privilege. In 16 addition, if Baker's counsel determines that some documents are truly protected by a 17 privacy privilege (e.g., an e-mail containing irrelevant, purely personal financial 18 information that is in no way connected to Pukke, Dolphin Development or Sanctuary 19 Bay Estates), he may also withhold these documents. Counsel should err on the side of production. . . . Should the Receiver question whether documents were inappropriately withheld, the Court may choose to review all or a subset of randomly-chosen documents in camera, and may order all documents be produced regardless of privilege assertions if it determines that any of the documents reviewed were improperly withheld.

20 February 1, 2006 Order at 3.

21 Baker began producing documents on April 12, 2006. On May 1, 2006 he inadvertently
22 produced e-mails that he contends are private and/or privileged. On June 1, 2006, the Receiver 23 informed Baker that some of the e-mails he produced appeared to be listed on his privilege log. On 24 June 23, 2006, Baker confirmed that the e-mails listed on his privilege log had been inadvertently
25 produced, and demanded their return. On June 26 and June 29, 2006, the Receiver rejected Baker's 26 privacy and privilege claims. On July 10, 2006, the Receiver – who had reviewed the documents
27 before discovering they were listed on the privilege log – returned the disks containing Baker's 28 e-mail production, retaining copies of all documents except for attorney client communications

1 between Baker and his attorneys at Russ, Miliband & Smith, who represented Baker in his efforts to 2 quash the subpoena. That same day, in the Maryland District Court, the Receiver included, under 3 seal, one of the e-mails that appeared on Baker's privilege log in support of the Receiver's 4 opposition to a motion to quash a subpoena served on agents for another newly-discovered corporate 5 asset. On July 19, 2006, the Receiver informed Baker that unless he moved for a protective order
6 within fourteen days, the Receiver would assume that Baker had waived any privilege or privacy 7 claims as to the inadvertently produced e-mails.

8 On August 3, 2006, Baker retained new counsel. Baker's new counsel and the Receiver 9 engaged in further meet and confer, but neither party modified its position regarding the validity or 10 waiver of Baker's privilege and privacy claims. On August 17, 2006, the Receiver reiterated its 11 belief that Mr. Baker had waived any right to argue that the inadvertently produced documents 12 should be returned on privilege or privacy grounds and explicitly told Baker that the Receiver would 13 not refrain from reviewing or using the documents, and would in fact use some of the documents in 14 a motion for contempt that the Receiver planned to file before the end of August.

15 Finally, on August 22, 2006 – almost four months after the e-mails were inadvertently 16 produced, and almost three months after first learning of his mistake – Baker applied ex parte for an 17 order shortening time to move for a protective order requesting that the Court compel the Receiver 18 to return all the documents Baker identified in his privilege log and that the Court sanction the 19 Receiver for its failure to do so earlier. The Court granted the motion to shorten time, and held a 20 hearing on September 12, 2006.

22 III. DISCUSSION

23

24 A. The Receiver returned all communications between Baker and his attorneys at 25 Russ, Miliband & Smith.

26 The Receiver returned all communications between Baker and his attorneys at Russ, 27 Miliband & Smith. See Aug. 15, 2005 Kane Decl. ¶ 5. Accordingly, these communications are not 28 at issue in this motion.

1 B. The Receiver need not return the communications between Baker and attorney 2 Rodwell Williams because the Receiver holds the attorney-client privilege for 3 Receivership Property.

4 It appears from the e-mails the Receiver attached to his Opposition that Baker 5 continues to claim the privilege for communications between Rodwell Williams, an attorney, and 6 himself and/or persons acting on behalf of Dolphin Development or other Receivership property, 7 both before and after the Maryland District Court appointed the Receiver as the exclusive manager
8 of Receivership. See, e.g., Opp'n Exs. 5, 11, 27, 29, 31. There is no evidence that Williams
9 represents Baker in the current discovery disputes, or that Williams represented Baker in any matter 10 related to the FTC's action against Pukke. On the contrary, these e-mails establish that Williams 11 was purportedly acting as the attorney for Dolphin Development and drafted documents that would 12 allow Dolphin Development to conduct its business and sell property – property that it no longer 13 legally controlled due to the appointment of the Receiver.

14 In its February 1, 2006 Order, this Court concluded that Dolphin Development was 15 Receivership Property. Accordingly, Baker may not assert the attorney-client privilege for 16 communications between himself and counsel for Dolphin Development that occurred after 17 appointment of the Receiver because the Receiver holds that privilege for all Receivership Property.
18 See Securities and Exchange Comm. v. Marker, 2006 WL 288426, *3 (M.D.N.C. Feb. 6, 2006)
19 (receiver succeeds to rights of management with regard to company in receivership, including right 20 to control attorney-client privilege, although receiver does not control individual attorney-client 21 privilege of the company's former owner where attorney who represented company in receivership 22 also jointly represented former owner in several underlying fraud actions). Marker adopted the 23 reasoning of Commodity Futures Trading Commission v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343, 352-53 (1986) 24 (the role of a bankruptcy trustee was analogous to that of management of a solvent corporation and 25 thus the trustee had the power to waive the attorney-client privilege of the corporation in bankruptcy 26 with regard to prebankruptcy communications). Unlike in Marker, there are no similar joint-27 representation concerns here. Accordingly, the Receiver holds the attorney-client privilege for 28 Dolphin Development and communications made on behalf of Dolphin Development with attorney Williams since the Receiver's appointment. The Receiver also holds the attorney-client privilege for

1 Sanctuary Bay Estates, Sittee River Wildlife Reserve and Triton. See Aug. 15, 2005 Kane Decl., 2 Ex. 3. Further, the Receiver holds the attorney-client privilege for these entities even for 3 communications occurring before the Receiver was appointed. See Weintraub, 471 U.S. at 353.

4 Ignoring the Court's prior finding that Dolphin Development is Receivership property, see 5 February 1, 2006 Order, Baker tries to distance Pukke from Dolphin Development and the 6 Receiver's right to waive the privilege in lieu of Pukke. Baker argues that the Receiver has no 7 interest in Dolphin Development because Pukke owned only 60%, not 100%, and because Pukke is 8 not a director of Dolphin Development. Pocket Brief (Doc. No. 69), at 3. This argument is specious 9 at best. The Court takes judicial notice of information from the Belize Registry that Pukke is a 10 director of Dolphin Development. Aug. 15, 2005 Kane Decl., Ex. 3. The Receiver, who has 11 succeeded to all Pukke's rights and privileges with regard to Pukke's assets, has accordingly 12 succeeded to the privilege held by Pukke as agent for Dolphin Development. Therefore, Baker 13 cannot assert the corporate attorney-client privilege against the Receiver with regard to 14 communications regarding Dolphin Development, Sanctuary Bay Estates, Sittee River Wildlife 15 Reserve, Triton or other Receivership Assets.

17 C. Baker has waived the attorney-client and privacy privileges through his delay in 18 seeking to protect the documents after the Receiver notified him of their production.

19 Alternatively, Baker has waived the attorney-client and/or privacy privilege as to these 20 communications. The February 1, 2006 Order denying Baker's motion to quash required Baker to 21 produce any communications not protected by the attorney-client privilege which were arguably 22 relevant to Receivership Assets. Baker produced documents to the Receiver beginning April 12, 23 2006 through May 25, 2006. Aug. 15, 2005 Kane Decl., ¶4. The Receiver did not receive the first 24 privilege log until May 8, 2005, after he already had reviewed all documents produced by that date.
25 Id. After receiving the privilege log, and noticing that some of the previously produced items were 26 listed there, the Receiver asked Baker to confirm whether the production was intentional and how he 27 wanted to handle the inadvertently produced e-mails. See MPA (Doc. No. 55), at Ex. 7 (June 1, 28 2006 letter from Receiver informing Baker that Baker had inadvertently produced attorney-client

1 communications with his counsel Rus, Miliband & Smith, P.C., and asking Baker's counsel to "call 2 me to discuss how you wish for us to handle those documents . . ." The Receiver further explained
3 that "it appears that most or all of the other items on your privilege logs were also produced. I am 4 unable to tell, based on the production and the letters that accompany the production, whether the 5 production of these other documents was intentional. Based upon the review of those documents . . .
6 the other documents . . . do not appear to be protectable").

7 Baker did not answer this letter until June 23, 2006 – more than three weeks after the 8 Receiver raised the potential inadvertent disclosure. Id., Ex. 8. Baker did not move for a protective 9 order for an additional two months, despite the Receiver's warning that it would not refrain from 10 reviewing and using these documents in litigation. Baker's delay in redressing the problem, and his 11 lack of due care in producing the documents initially, support a finding of waiver.

12 Baker nonetheless urges the Court to uphold the privilege, arguing that he took appropriate 13 steps to preserve the privilege after discovering the inadvertent production. The Court is not 14 persuaded by these arguments. Indeed, Bagley v. TRW, Inc., 204 F.R.D. 170 (C.D. Cal. 2001), 15 which Baker cites in his moving papers, supports a finding of waiver. In Bagley, the defendant had 16 inadvertently produced 200 of the 300 documents it had designated as attorney client privileged in a 17 production of approximately 200,000 documents. Months later, the plaintiff notified defendant of its 18 error, and the very next day, the defendant contacted plaintiff to rectify the situation. Although the 19 plaintiff refused to return the documents, the parties agreed to segregate and seal the documents 20 pending judicial resolution, if necessary. Three years later, the defendant filed a motion for 21 protective order. In order to determine whether the defendant had waived any attorney-client 22 objections, the Bagley Court applied a totality of the circumstances test, examining the 23 reasonableness of the precautions taken to prevent inadvertent disclosure, the scope of the 24 production, the time it took to rectify the error, the extent of the disclosure, and the overriding issue 25 of fairness. The court concluded that defendant had taken adequate precautions to prevent 26 disclosure; that by calling the plaintiff the day after discovering the inadvertent disclosure, the 27 defendant had scored "a point," but that defendant's failure to discover its mistake initially and then 28 its subsequent failure to get a handle on its document production weighed against it; that 200,000

1 documents is a large production; that 200 inadvertently produced documents was extensive 2 (although maybe not so extensive when expressed as a ratio of all documents produced); and that the 3 attorney client privilege was one of the oldest recognized privileges and should not be ignored, and 4 thus fairness weighed in favor of the defendant, especially where the parties had agreed not to use 5 the documents in the case and thus the plaintiff could not be said to have relied upon the documents 6 to develop his case.

7 The facts in this case are very different. Baker argues that his attorneys took “great care” to 8 prevent inadvertent disclosure, and that the scope of the production was “massive” (7,000 e-mails).
9 See Aug. 22, 2006 Presiado Decl. ¶¶ 10-11. The Court disagrees with these assessments. The fact 10 that Baker actually produced all his privileged information suggests that the attorneys did not take 11 great care, and 7,000 documents, while significant, is not “massive.” At most, the second factor 12 weighs slightly in Baker’s favor. The next two factors strongly weigh in the Receiver’s favor: Baker 13 took three weeks to even respond to the Receiver’s letter revealing that documents identified on the 14 privilege log had been produced, and three months to file a motion for protective order; and Baker 15 produced every single one of the documents identified on his privilege log, rather than simply 16 overlooking a handful of private or privileged documents. The Court concludes that Baker has 17 waived the attorney-client privilege and/or any privacy privilege – to the extent these privileges 18 existed – as a result of his undue delay and lack of due care with respect to purportedly privileged 19 documents.

21 D. Baker also waived any privacy rights by improperly withholding non-private 22 documents that on their face fall outside the scope of the Court’s February 1, 23 2006 Order allowing withholding of “truly private” information only.

24 The February 1, 2006 Order allowed Baker to withhold from production private, irrelevant 25 information. The Court emphasized that this exclusion was for information “truly protected by a 26 privacy privilege (e.g., an e-mail containing irrelevant, purely personal financial information that is 27 in no way connected to Pukke, Dolphin Development or Sanctuary Bay Estates).” The Court 28 stressed that the exclusion for “truly private” information was intended to be narrow and to allow Baker to withhold only entirely irrelevant documents. Baker instead misused this narrow exclusion

1 to shield responsive, non-privileged documents from discovery. The Court generally agrees with the 2 Receiver's characterization of Exhibits 1-32, and will not address here in further detail how each of 3 these exhibits falls within the scope of the February 1, 2006 Order. Based on the Court's review of 4 these documents, it is apparent that Baker abused the Court's permission to withhold "truly private"
5 information to instead withhold documents that were clearly and very directly connected to Pukke, 6 Dolphin Development and Sanctuary Bay Estates. Baker used the privilege log to withhold as 7 private relevant documents that were not privileged, flouting the Court's ruling and hiding damaging 8 information from the Receiver. This information is directly relevant to the matter, and should have 9 been produced to the Receiver in the first instance.

10 Furthermore, the cases that Baker cites do not support his argument that his allegedly private 11 documents should be afforded the same high level of protection as documents protected by attorney-12 client privilege. Black v. City and County of Honolulu, 112 F. Supp. 2d 1041 (D. Haw. 2000), was 13 a sexual harassment case where the plaintiff sued a police department for, among other things, 14 covert surveillance which she did not consent to. In Veilleux v. NBC, 8 F. Supp. 2d 23 (D. Me.
15 1998), an interviewee sued a television company after it broadcast a segment in which he admitted 16 to testing positive for drugs. The court held that, although discussion of the matter with an 17 interviewer might be evidence of implied consent to publicize, the interviewee's repeated and clear 18 requests not to publicize information about the drug test and the interviewer's agreement to treat the 19 disclosure as confidential established a triable issue of fact as to consent. Neither of these cases 20 addresses whether an individual waives any privacy interest by inadvertently producing documents 21 in the course of litigation. Even if the same exacting standards applied, the Court would still 22 conclude that Baker has waived any privacy privilege through disclosure.

23 Mr. Baker and his attorneys were on notice that the Court contemplated denying him any 24 privacy protection if he over-designated documents on his privilege log. The Court warned Mr.
25 Baker that, in the event that the Receiver suspected that some documents had been improperly 26 withheld, the Receiver could inform the Court and the Court might choose to inspect some or all of 27 the purportedly privileged documents and order production of all documents for which privileged 28 was claimed if it determined that Baker had improperly withheld any documents. The documents

1 that Baker claims to have inadvertently produced establish that Baker has engaged in just such 2 abuse.

3 E. The Receiver did not engage in sanctionable behavior by reviewing and retaining documents that did not appear privileged.

5 Rather than proffering any justification for his decision to withhold these obviously relevant 6 e-mails, Baker seems to believe that the best defense is a good offense, and accuses the Receiver of 7 breaching its ethical obligations by refusing to return the e-mails. See MPA at 22-23 (quoting ABA 8 Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility). This is not a good offense. If anyone 9 engaged in sanctionable behavior, it is Baker. First, Baker's cover letters repeatedly informed the 10 Receiver that he had decided to produce documents that contained private information. See MPA 11 Exs. 4-6 ("the disk contains additional e-mails which Mr. Baker has decided to produce despite their 12 private nature"). Thus, the presence of private e-mails would not, by itself, suggest a production 13 error. Second, the Receiver reviewed the e-mails before receiving a privilege log, and could not 14 have determined that the e-mails were purportedly privileged until seeing that they were listed in the 15 privilege log, because on their face they did not appear to be "purely private." See Aug. 29, 2006
16 Caris Decl. ¶ 3 (privilege log received May 8, 2006); Aug. 29, 2006 Kane Decl., ¶ 4 (received 17 privilege log after reviewed Baker's documents); MPA Exs. 4-5 (privilege logs). To the contrary, 18 most of the e-mails mention Dolphin Development or other Receivership assets. See Opp'n Ex. 1-19 32. Thus, unlike the situations contemplated by the ABA in its Ethics Opinions, these documents 20 were not obviously privileged or confidential.

21
22 III. CONCLUSION

23 For the reasons stated above, the Court denies Baker's motion for protective order and denies 24 the Receiver's application to file documents under seal that are not privileged under this Order. The 25 Receiver may file a new application to seal those documents, if any, still protected by the attorney-26 client privilege. Otherwise, the Receiver shall electronically file all documents related to this 27 motion.
